DOTTIE RAMBO REMEMBERED WITH A STAR ON MUSIC CITY'S WALK OF FAME

NASHVILLE, Tennessee (November 6, 2011) - Dottie Rambo shined brilliantly with pen in hand, so it was a perfectly fitting tribute that she should receive a star on Music City's Walk Of Fame on November 6, 2011, in a ceremony honoring seven worthy recipients.

Daughter, Reba Rambo-McGuire, received the star, on her mother's behalf. It was presented to her by world renowned producer, Tony Brown, whose musical roots began in the Christian music arena. McGuire's poignant words were nearly as beautifully stated as the lyrics of her mother's songs. She expressed that her mother found a song in everything and, in everything, a song. McGuire shared, "My mom would hear that hammer we're all hearing now in the distance, and she'd say, someone pass me a pen and paper. That sound is part of the orchestra for the song God is about to have me write." She continued, "My sweet mom even made my school assignment to memorize the Gettysburg Address into a melody and guess what? I did it!" She told how Rambo viewed the world, her lyrics, and everything that God created as a musical score that God Himself intended for our enjoyment and His glory.

We certainly felt that joy with songs such as "I Will Glory In The Cross," "He Looked Beyond My Fault," "I Go To The Rock," and many others. Rambo's Grammy award-winning songwriting was second to none. It was truly a wonderful moment for Music City, and the world, when her gifts and her legacy were celebrated among family, friends, and fans in the greatest city for music celebration on earth...
